A Report of the Trial of

Thomas Oliver Selfridge, Esq.

On an indictment for Manslaughter, for killing Mr. Charles Austin, on the Public Exchange, in Boston Aug. 4, 1806

THE lively interest which this extraordinary occurrence had excited in the public mind, called for a full and impartial statement of facts, both in the development of the testimony, and the pleadings which took place at the trial. This injunction appears to have been fulfilled in the present publication, as it comes from the press, sanctioned by the official reporter of the state, and under the supervision of the court itself. The public are therefore presented with all the documents necessary to form a correct understanding of the subject as well in relation to the unhappy catastrophe, as to the course and operation of the laws, in cases of this nature.

At the same place may be had,

A Correct Statement of the whole Preliminary Controversy, between Thomas Oliver Selfridge, and Benjamin Austin, (father of the deceased C. Austin.)

By Thomas Oliver Selfridge.

— "He takes my life, When he doth take the means whereby I live."

This pamphlet embraces a variety of matter, immediately relevant to the unhappy occurrence, which deprived Mr. Charles Austin of life; in which the author, in vindicating his conduct in this extraordinary affair, is drawn into a retrospection of the general character of Benjamin Austin. In adopting this mode, Mr. Selfridge has given loose to a boldness of asperity, seldom found in the writings of our best authors, and which reflect great credit on his genius and learning.

Price of the Report—1 Dollar.

Price of the Statement—27 1-2 Cents.

Mr. Editor,

The following short production was suggested by the late outrage upon our frigate the Chesapeake.

As the metrical execution was not governed by the rules of prosody, but regulated by the ear alone, I could not venture to call it a Poem without the modification of Prosodic; its subject claims the title Epic. Its style is the result of an attempt to imitate Ossian, the celebrated son of Fingal. The incidents of his poems are more picturesque; the language of this, then, to be appropriate and expressive, could not be so heroic or vivid (the incapacity of the present writer apart).

The 1st paragraph merely describes the sailing of the ship, and the feelings of those on board, natural to the sensibility of the human mind. The 2d, the compatibility of heroism and grief. The 3d, is the description of the calm at the time of attack, and of the assault, and of the defenceless state of our ship. The names of the British ships are introduced to record the perpetrators of the wanton violation of our rights and of the faith of nations. The 4th is a call upon our countrymen to arms for the defence of our country, and the support of their independence and dignity. It concludes with a metaphor, the effect of which I will not weaken by explanation. There are some obscurities of expression, as "the wind of the mountains," "the false sky of the deep," "the shores of the white rocks," and "the land of mist," which will not fatigue the reader to find out their allusion, while to explain them would be to rob him of the pleasure of discovery. I hope I have left ample room for the readers' imagination, that excluded—the piece is nothing.

Of the Present Times.

The Sons of Peace spread the white-bosom'd sails to the wind of the mountains, the ship moved to the east; the shady land of their early days grows dim to their sight; the breeze is soft, it only whispers in the shrouds; the bending prow parts the yielding water, the parting waters rippling against the sides of the ship curl in the circling eddies of the wake: The wind freshens; she rushes foaming thro' the bay; the spiny masts, which once rose amidst the rustling of the forest leaves, now bend forward with the fulness of the pressing sails: The beam of the sun glitters on the sand of their shores 'till they sink behind the green waves of the west. They ride on the wide lake of Ocean, its shores the blue field of the stars. The eyes of the valiant are moist; their sighs mix with the murmur of the rumbling seas. They listen to the long echo of the sounding beach. A silent manly sorrow swells in the thoughts of departure; when they think on the time of return, a languid joy gleams through their breasts like the light of the moon through a cloud rising in the western sky; she may arise blushing in the east, like a new bride from her chamber; the light of her face shall be mild and joyful.

Yes, the eyes of the valiant are moist; a tender regret breathes in silence from their souls. And shall the sons of the sword not know the joy of tears? Shall the sadness of their hearts be denied the wings of a sigh? The cheek of the brave never blush'd beneath the sparkling dew of grief: the tears of the great are the gems of the soul; its splendor is seen in the lightning of the eye: The heart loves to float on the lucid stream, when it shines in the rays of the soul. Heroes in tears are like diamonds in the dew of Heaven when the sun pours his beams on the drops. The tears of the mighty in battle wash the blood from their swords and brighten their blades with humanity. Blood is no stain in the steel of the brave; they delight not in the battles of the feeble; nor do tears dishonor their fame; they indulge not the grief of little minds.

The wind is low; the sails are flapping loose with the roll of the ship; the loose ropes slap against the masts; the sluggish flag hangs sleepy by the staff, it rises like the lids of the drowsy at the passing breath of air: the shadows of the stripes worm along on the smooth waving of the water, the stars of the blue field dance on the false sky of the deep. The ship of the Sons of war appears; they speak with the words of peace, but their voice cheats their guile—their thoughts are dark they team with treachery and death.—They ask the Rights of the sons of freedom. They look on the Eagle of Liberty with the hate of envy; jealous of his soaring flight, they stretch out the gory hand of tyranny to pluck the plumes of his wing; he shrunk from the unhalloved touch, but not from the dread of power. Never degraded, he scorn'd the approach, and opposed the insulting wrong: He alights on the arm of the chief; his sword beams in his hand; he lifts it as a shield: he beads the dark brow of contempt on the haughty Britain; the lightning of indignation flashes in his eye; with the voice of courage he asserts the rights of his nation: The same fire is bright in their eyes, the same voice echoes through the sons of the Chesapeake. The thunder of the secret foe roars from her sides, the smoke ascends red with the lightning of the ship, like rolling clouds before the blood-red moon in the east; red beams of fire burst from the bellowing cannon, black through the rising clouds of smoke: The harmless ship groans to the storm of guns; showers of death rattle against her sides like hail beating upon the roof. The valiant sons of Columbia bleed and die without fame; no honor is upon their wounds, no glory smiles upon the face of death, for they fought not! at peace with the world, their thoughts were not of battle; peace was in the mouth of their cannon, their swords were at rest in their scabbards; the thunder of war was not in their hands: The lawless foe still pours her sides upon the defenceless Chesapeake—she strikes! (be still my indignant soul! cease rage of my burning blood!) But the Eagle of America is unhurt; she has not lost a feather. The fall of the flag gives no victory to Triumph, no terror to the thunder of Bellona, nor the blood of the murdered a spot of fame to the insidious savage Leopard.

Sons of the land of Peace! raise your arms from your sides; this is no time for the soft archbrow of repose, let it tell the rage of your souls; let the stream of your blood hiss through your veins; let it be on your cheeks with the red glow of resenting wrath; let the blood of the slain be red before your eyes; let the groans of the wounded live in your ears, let them echo on your tongues; tell them to the winds; winds tell them to the waves; let the angry waves beating tell them to the shore; the sounding shores tell them to the woods—let the solemn roar of the lofty pines tell them to the mountains; the deep voice of the mountains shall tell them to the passing clouds; the fleeting clouds shall tell them to the spirit of WASHINGTON of mighty deeds, Chief of the battle of other times; it shall come on the winds, it shall speak to the hearts of his sons—"Let your hands be upon your swords, let death be upon their blades; but let them not be stained with the blood of the weak, nor fall upon the low in battle. A dark cloud hangs over your land, but the sun of glory is in it; the edge is now gulf with its beams; its shade is dark upon the white cap'd seas; the billows will tell their rumbling terrors to the shores of the white rocks; the clouds will settle on the land of mist. The tempest shall pass away, and the blue sky of the West shall be clear; the setting sun of the east shall shine bright upon your swords, and the splendor of your deeds shall be a new sun rising in the west; its light shall be the light of peace, and its rays shall extend thro' the world! Let your hands be upon your swords," said the Spirit of the Warrior of deeds of valor, "your foes shall see the pale ghosts of your fathers on the foams of the waves; they shall hear them in the thunder of Heaven; their yells in the blast of the storm. I will be upon your hills and in the bosom of your soldiers, and the Lord of Hosts, who is the God of Justice will be on your side."

Mr. Elliot to his Constituents.

The honorable Mr. Elliot, representative in congress of the south eastern district in Vermont, has addressed a series of letters to his constituents, the publication of which has been commenced in the Vermont Journal. The following are the "Introductory Remarks."

Those printers who may commence the publication of the following letters, are requested to publish the whole number, which will not exceed six or eight. The connection between the first and the last will be obvious in the sequel. The first four were written before the commencement of the last session of congress. In them it is denied that France had demanded tribute from the U. S. in those which follow, the real policy by which France is attempting to subject the U. S. to her influence, will be delineated. It will be proved to the satisfaction of all, that the terms of a treaty between us and Spain must be dictated by France, and that, in all probability, those terms must be humiliating to our country, or that we must go to war with both those powers. In this situation, the duty of supporting the national government, although some of its present measures are extremely improper, will be steadily enforced. Its measures during the first session of the ninth congress will be justified; a part of its policy during the last session will be mildly but boldly censured. Its integrity and general ability will remain unquestioned.

The writer will of course connect himself with no class of organized opponents of the administration. The general merits of the government, indeed, will be praised, not merely with cool sincerity, but with ardent zeal; and its monarchical, aristocratical, or violently prejudiced enemies, can have but little gratification to expect from the following pages. They may claim the author as one of their party, but they will claim in vain; upon that subject the public shall not be deceived. It is in relation to the subject of national defence alone that the writer opposes the administration. He is a friend to the government of his country; but he is equally hostile to the humble parasites and to the violent enemies of that government. The indiscriminate opposition of uncandid federalism, and the systematic sycophancy of office-hunting democracy, will equally be the objects of cool but indignant reprobation.

Extracts from Letter No. 1.

"The practice which has been adopted by individuals, in some sections of the union, of announcing themselves to the people as candidates for office, has yet to find its way into this quarter, although it would not be difficult to shew that it is fairer and more congenial with republican principles, than the fashionable method of proposing candidates by what are called caucuses. It is to be hoped that the latter mode will soon be discontinued, and that the former will never become more extensive in its operation."

* * * * *

"I must be pardoned for introducing here an allusion to a particular member of the national councils, whose name was used with some severity of remark in my former public letters, and with unreasonable asperity in some private ones, which improperly came to the light after the feelings which dictated them had in a great measure ceased to operate. In reflecting upon what I have written in reference to the name and character of Mr. John Randolph, it is a source of exquisite consolation that his integrity has not been questioned; to question his talents would be to abandon common sense. Inferior to few, perhaps to none of his countrymen, in the brilliant powers of genius and eloquence, his mind, elevated above every mercenary motive, embraces the whole circle of human character and conduct. It is true that he has lately opposed an administration which we continue to support; but who can candidly say that he ought to be treated as an apostate? A great mind is always an independent one. Those who know the particular friends of that gentleman will not hazard the opinion that they are destitute of handsome talents; and where is the evidence of their want of integrity? The man whom they nominate for the presidential chair will not succeed in opposition to the more experienced and more popular candidate of the republican majority; but he possesses an amiable character, respectable talents, and unquestionable republican principles, and may one day obtain the first honors of his country—Honors which, while they would exalt the man, would not disgrace the nation."

* * * * *

"In the present interesting situation of our foreign relations, a cordial reunion of the divided republicans of our country, an union of all honest politicians, not as the watch word of a party, but in the literal import of the terms, is much to be desired. As men, as citizens, as christians, even as politicians, in respect to particular questions, we may harmonize with those of different sentiments and we ought at all events to avoid every species of violence and persecution."

NEW YORK, July 7.

Late Foreign Intelligence.

The ship Elizabeth has arrived at Bedford from London. A commercial friend has favored the editor of the Mercantile Advertiser with London papers received by her to the 22d of May. A few days later than any previous advices from that quarter. They contain no intelligence of moment. The following are the principal articles:

LONDON, May 18.

It is mentioned in letters by the Danzig mail, that a small corps of British and Russian troops had landed in Cyprus, and were cordially received by the inhabitants.

The transports that were at Portsmouth have been ordered to the Downs to receive troops immediately. Ten thousand foot, it is said, are to be embarked, and four thousand horse. Four companies of artillery have been embarked at Woolwich. The troops of gunner-drivers are also under orders for embarkation.

The letter which the king of Sweden wrote to gen. Essen, refusing to ratify the treaty which he concluded with the French, is said to have commenced thus: "I learn, with much displeasure, that you have concluded an armistice with Napoleon, commander of the French armies, &c. I condemn his proffered friendship, and consider that my own honor, as well as the interest of my people, impose on me the necessity of treating him as an enemy."

The French succeeded lately in gaining possession of the heads of one of the canals near Danzig, which would have considerably facilitated their operations, if they could have retained it; but the garrison dislodged them from it, after a very severe and obstinate conflict. One of the gun-boats, lately disguised as a merchantman, sailed up the Vistula, near Danzig, and opened a heavy fire upon a French column, which immediately broke and fled in every direction, leaving behind them a great number of killed and wounded.

May 19.

Last night lord G. L. Gower set off for St. Petersburg.

May 21.

Letters from Rotterdam, dated on Monday last, were yesterday received. Intelligence from Danzig, of the 5th inst. had reached Holland. At that time the siege had not been raised, but there was an evident relaxation in the operations of the enemy. This was attributed to the vigor with which the reiterated attempts of the French to carry the town by storm, on the night of the 29th of April, were repulsed. The garrison made sorties almost every day, most of which are represented as having been completely successful.

These letters state it to be the general opinion in Holland, that the court of Vienna was on the eve of declaring against France. It was even reported on the 18th inst. that such a declaration had actually been made. We do not believe that Austria has yet gone so far. The intended interview between the two emperors will, however, produce something decisive; it will either terminate in confirming Austria in her system of neutrality, or making her a party in the war.

Captain Baker, of the Tribune frigate, has destroyed a convoy of Spanish gun-boats and coasters, in a very spirited action; but unfortunately, in the contest, he lost sixteen men, killed, wounded and missing. Captain Baker had a very narrow escape; a ball struck the flint out of a musket which he was about to fire. His coxswain was one of those wounded.

The channel fleet sailed from Torbay on Monday, under the command of sir James Saumarez, to resume its station off Ushant.

Admiral Russel is appointed commander in chief of the North Sea squadron.

May 22.

Yesterday we received Dutch papers to the 20th inst. and Paris Journals to Sunday last.

The only intelligence contained in them relates to the progress of the Russian army. General Michelson, it appears, had crossed the Danube, after having carried the fortress of Giurgewo by storm. Czerni Georges had also lent his powerful aid to the Russians.

We are happy to state that our commercial regulations with Russia which were likely to have been interrupted, owing to some mismanagement which it would be altogether needless to state, are in a fair way of being placed on a solid and permanent footing. Matters were lately so circumstanced, that a passport could not be obtained for an Englishman without being sent from St. Petersburg with much good authority in the name of the Russian government, and by his court British subjects entering the Russian ports such persons being his excellency's agent.

GOTTENBURGH, May 8.
Yesterday a Swedish vessel arrived from Colberg, after having carried thither a cargo of herring. The captain has brought a letter for his owners, wherein it is mentioned that Colberg is bravely defended against the French, who have not yet been able to take a single outwork, notwithstanding all the sacrifices they have already made, especially in possessing themselves of a fort that commands the mouth of the harbor. The inhabitants have not the least fear that the place will be taken, but on the contrary think of acting offensivly.
May 11.
This day the king sets out from Malmo for Ystad, accompanied by the old gen-Toll, where they are going directly to embark for Stralsund. His majesty intends to take the command of his army, which will in a short time be joined, according to the best information, by 10,000 Prussian and 40,000 British troops, who are daily expected to arrive in the Baltic.
The queen, the dutchess of Brunswick, and the royal children, are to set out at the same time for this place, and preparations are making here for their reception.
FRANKFORT, May 6.
The divisions of gen. Molitor & Boudet which have arrived in the vicinity of Augsburg, received orders, the latter end of the month of April, to march without delay for Leipzig and Halle.
According to accounts from Buda, his majesty the emperor has decreed, that all the subjects of the house of Austria, as well as the Hungarians, from 17 to 40 years of age, shall belong to the army, without exception of rank. They are to be provided with arms and uniforms, and taught their exercise; and in this manner a national guard is to be formed, which is to be called out in case of necessity.
The states of Hungary have agreed to support his majesty with all their power.
A regular guard of 5000 men is to be formed and supported at the public expense, and in time of war they are to serve in common with other regiments.
PHILADELPHIA, July 7.
Yesterday arrived sloop Susannah, captain Gerrish, from Richmond, who says, that on Friday evening last, while lying at anchor in Hampton Roads, he heard a voice hailing of him, when after a search, he found a man holding himself by the sloop's cable. Capt.
G. with his people got him on board so exhausted that he could not stand; when revived he informed capt. G. that his name was William Winfield, that he was pressed from the ship Fair Trader, of Philadelphia, some time since, when she was taken and sent to Halifax; that having stripped himself that evening, he had swam from one of the British ships of war, then lying about four miles off.
He further informed, that the British ships had come up to demand their casks and water, that the ship he belonged to had not more than one month's water on board, tho' they all had six month's other provisions, and that it was said on board the ships of war, that if their demand was refused they would destroy Hampton; for which purpose, he says, they had put a 32 pounder on board of each of the two pilot boats they had some time since purchased, they had also fitted a number of their boats and barges, with 4 and 6 pounders and swivels, and had ordered a number of picked men to be ready to man them on the signal to be given, which he understood would be that day. On Saturday the 4th instant, at sun-rise, capt. G. left Hampton Roads, and about 11 or 12 o'clock, being then about 40 miles from Hampton, he heard several heavy guns, but cannot say they were from Hampton, tho' they were in that direction.
Captain G. further informs, that the five British ships were lying about two miles from Hampton, being the nearest distance they could come to it—that the people on shore were on the alert, and should the British be mad enough to land, it is hoped they will pay for their temerity.
The above-mentioned sailor says, the Bri-ish seemed determined to take every American vessel they could meet with—that they had taken several and sent them to Halifax, and that they had then in co. a ship and brig from the West-Indies, bound in.

BALTIMORE, July 7.

folk; Washington, of N. York. July 8, boarded by an English privateer in sight of St. Kitts, and made a prize of her. Came into the Capes on Saturday morning; saw nothing of any of the English ships within the Capes. On Friday about 15 leagues from the Capes saw 2 large ships standing to the southward and eastward supposed them ships of war.

Capt. B. reports that captain Wing, of Charleston, who arrived at Guadalupe from Barbados, reported that a packet had arrived there from England, brought an account that war had been declared by England against the United States, and also an English brig brought into Guada-loupe, direct from England in 17 days, gave the same account by her papers.
RICHMOND, July 8.
The Executive of Virginia have been in almost constant session since Monday morning nine o'clock, occasioned by the arrival of an express from Norfolk, who brought the letter from Richard Evers Lee, Mayor of that borough, inclosing copies of the insolent letters of the British commodore, J. E. Douglas, and of his firm and magnanimous answer.
Many important and interesting measures have been adopted by the council to repel the invasion which they have unanimously declared to be actually existing, and to enforce the president's proclamation; but we are not permitted in the present crisis, to publish a full account of their proceedings. We are authorized to say, however, that a detachment of militia, well armed and equipped, is ordered to march to Norfolk immediately; and another to be stationed at Hampton and its vicinity; and that the commandants of all the regiments on the sea coast, on the bay, and on the shores below the falls of the rivers James, York, Rappahannock and Potomac, are ordered to hold the troops under their command in readiness to oppose any attempt by the crew of any British armed vessel to obtain supplies of water or provisions; and to call them out to resist and repel any such attempts.
Capt. William Richardson's and captain Peyton Randolph's companies of infantry, and captain Benjamin Sheppard's troop of cavalry are to march to Norfolk immediately, from the city of Richmond; capt.
Thomas Bolling Robertson's company of light infantry, another company of infantry, and captain Bowden's troop of cavalry, from the town of Petersburg; major John Ambler commands the infantry, and major John M'Rea the cavalry; and the whole, on arriving at the place of their destination, are to be under the command of brigadier general Mathews.

FRIDAY, JULY 10.
MARRIED last evening, by the Rev. Mr.
Muir, Captain BAZIL H. DAVIDSON, to Miss ELIZA HUNTER, daughter of Mr. John Hunter, all of this town.
To Capt. JOHN BONSAL, and the RIFLE CORPS of the town of Alexandria.
THE offer of your service, in support of the rights of your country, merits and meets the highest praise; and whenever the moment arrives in which these rights must appeal to the public arm for support, the spirit from which your offer flows, that which animates our nation, will be their sufficient safeguard.
To the Legislature will be rendered a faithful account of the events which have so justly excited the sensibilities of our country, of the measures taken to obtain reparation, and of their result—And to their wisdom will belong the course to be ultimately pursued.
In the mean time it is our duty to pursue that prescribed by the existing laws; towards which, should your services be requisite, this offer of them will be remembered.
I tender, for your country, the thanks you so justly deserve.

RUSSIA.
The taste of Russia, till of late years, was barbarous; the manners of her lower orders, still savage; but in grandeur & vastness of idea she towers above modern Europe, and alone resembles the ancients; to attempt to assemble all the Tartar nations to pay obedience to the throne at Cherson; to make the Egean resound with the thunder of the Baltic; to re-establish the Eastern empire, by planting the Russian standard at Byzantium (Constantinople) are ideas which soar above modern times. I hope and trust that France and Russia will not ultimately divide the world between them. [From Dr. Arthur Browne's sketches, written ten years since.]
* The palace of Czarsko Telo, is blue and gold, like the coat of an ancient beau; and one of the most famous pictures of Peter the Great, drawn under his own direction, represents him with a lady on his lap, a pot of porter in his hand, and a trumpeter behind his chair sounding his fame.
TURKEY, (from the same.)
We are marvelously prejudiced in despising the Turks as we do. We speak of them as the quintessence of folly and ignorance. Their prejudices are great, their politics false, and their aversion to improvement almost unconquerable; but the people cannot be so ignorant, who cast cannon, and build 80 gun ships; nor so foolish, who support themselves as an empire notwithstanding all the superior knowledge of christian Europe. They do not read printed books, but they have abundance of manuscripts; they do not study French or Latin, but Persian and Arabic are their polite languages. Will you believe their divan is ignorant of the affairs and the interests of Europe? Their existence, if they were such as commonly represented, would be a standing miracle.
[Has not late events strengthened this opinion of our learned countryman.] VULGAR ERRORS, (from the same.)
More than a century has elapsed since sir Thomas Browne published his works on vulgar errors. The world proudly thinks there is little occasion for any new work on the subject; I believe that very opinion is one of its vulgar errors, and that it is a great desideratum at this day.
[Would not the common opinion prevalent at this time in the United States, that the Spaniards are paltrons, and that 8 or 10 regiments would conquer, and retain Mexico, have a place in this wished for work.]
From the Winchester Gazette.
MR. BOWEN,
A man was this day apprehended in Middleburg, and sent to Leesburg jail, there to remain until the 3d of July, when he will undergo an examination before a called court, on suspicion of being a horse thief. He calls himself Joseph Heber, and says he lives in the state of Ohio—but a witness deposed on his examination before the magistrate, that his name is George Keesler, and that he was last summer discharged from the penitentiary. He had in possession two horses: one a black, about six years old, rubbed on the breast with harness; the other a grey or rather white horse. There can be no doubt but these are stolen horses, as he attempted to make his escape on foot, by leaping from the one he rode, and leaving both in the possession of the person who had apprehended him. By giving this statement a place in your paper, you will perhaps enable the owner or owners to regain their property, and contribute to bring to justice a villain.
He had in his possession a note for 11/10s. given by John Glen to Hezekiah Jones and Co. by them assigned to Ozias Austin, and by Austin to David Brown) the last assignment made on the 12th inst. which induces a suspicion that he has lately passed by that name). He had also a silver watch marked on the stem I W.

Middleburg, June 23, 1807.
From the N. T. American Citizen.
The Proclamation will be read with uncommon interest; it contains an able exposition of the repeated wrongs which we have suffered from the navy of England, and of the unusual if not surprising patience with which these wrongs have been endured.—In interdiction the president feeling with the nation at large, has very properly gone to the extent of his power; but have we the means of carrying the Proclamation completely into effect; I do not mean the abstract means for our resources, our power, our zeal, and our unanimity are all great, but the prepared means; those which may be called into immediate and efficient action? The interdiction is two fold; it extends to the entrance of the waters and harbors, and to supplies after the entrance shall have been effected. The latter can and will be carried into complete effect. But suppose that in defiance of the proclamation, the interdicted armed ships of his Britannic majesty enter our waters and harbors; where are our means to punish the aggression; to chastise the additional insult; where to drive them out? Let our citizens reflect upon the question, and adopt, promptly a doct whatever measures may be necessary to remedy the evil. We want a must ultimately have an efficient armed force of some kind, and if the government will not provide one for us, why not by voluntary contribution prepare it ourselves.
This is not a time for temporising measures. We know enough of and have suffered sufficient from the British government. Negotiation, without the necessary previous steps, would be followed by fresh outrages. We have long been amused by the British government and abused by its court martials. Should not Congress be immediately convened—intercourse suspended—an embargo laid, and the most prompt and vigorous measures of defence be adopted? We are a young and vigorous, a wealthy and powerful nation, and when our rights and honor are at stake (and they are at present) considerations of expence should be out of the question.— A government that will not protect its ci-zens is unworthy of their confidence.
